

The proposal only offers legislation which does not, and currently can not, address the technological barriers that exist. In addition, a huge leap is being made to include broadband services under the proposals when other judicial laws already apply. The FCC does not need to flex muscles for the sole purpose of extending its authority and/or budget needs.